

AMERICAN DOCTOR TELLS EXPERIENCE IN GERMAN PRISON

Washington has a visitor today from Kansas who knows from first-hand experience that the treatment accorded persons under suspicion in Germany is far from gentle.

He is Dr. John W. Field, of Kansas City, who was attending the University of Berlin at the time war was declared in Europe. He and a friend were seized in Burg, near Magdeburg, and pulled through the streets of the city to the barracks, because several German soldiers suspected that they were spies.

Angered by "America," Dr. Field was marched between two brawny soldiers. During the march he finally persuaded the soldiers to stop for a moment. He showed them his passport again, but they could not read English. Then he translated it in German and pointed to the word "America," which is most easily understood by the Germans because of the likeness of their word for the same thing.

"When I pointed out the word 'America' on my passport," declared Dr. Field today, "those near were suddenly incensed more than ever. Gripping my arms tighter than before, the soldiers pushed me along through the fast gathering crowds, who were anxious to get a look at the two 'spies' whom they expected to be shot. Newsboys crying 'Four aples shot in Magdeburg,' 'Spies poison water supply of Friedensburg,' were rushing about through the crowds, selling their papers readily. Things were surely breaking bad for us."

Took Blanket Away. "Finally arriving at the town barracks, we were cast into small barred cells. The soldiers, upon seeing a blanket in my cell, quickly opened the door again and took it away. No comfort for prisoners in Germany—yet if they know it!"

"Soon, however, a German officer opened the door of my cell and politely requested me to follow him. I was ushered into the presence of a German general and his staff. In their cross-examination, they treated me as a gentleman, let it be said to their credit."

"When the officers had examined me and made a favorable report, I was treated most considerately, and was released, with many apologies."

"Thousands of yelling people were waiting outside of the barracks to see us get shot. The general ordered that I should be slipped out through the back way. I got out of the way of the mob easily, and was soon joined by my friend. German trains could not move fast enough to suit us, after this experience."

Dr. Field came back to America, and after further work, received his doctor's degree at Clark University. He is also a graduate of the University of Nebraska.

Amundsen Again Off for North Pole, Carries Two Airplanes to Aid Trip

CHRISTIANIA, June 29.—Carrying two airplanes, Roald Amundsen's ship, Maude, in which the famous explorer will attempt to reach the North Pole, left here yesterday and will shortly reach Tromsø, where Captain Amundsen will be taken aboard.

Just before he left for Tromsø to make final preparations for his trip, Amundsen received a cable message from President Wilson through Secretary of State Lansing extending best wishes to the explorer. This is the first trip on which Amundsen has carried airplanes. He may complete his journey in them, accompanied by skilled aviators.

WEAK-HEARTED BOYS ARE SEGREGATED AT CAMP MEADE

CAMP MEADE, Md., June 29.—The saddest crowd in camp now is down near Disney, where the alien enemies are housed, the weak-hearted—but not faint-hearted—the crippled, permanently or temporarily, and others are held pending assignment to some service other than that overseas. Almost to a man they want to go to France and fight.

Some who have been sent to this place of detention are only temporarily defective in legs or arms, but are likely later on to pass the physical tests for active service. In training some of the fellows who have most real and "pep" suffer injuries. Some have had knees a result of too violent attacks upon wooden Huns. They are sorry now they were so cruel to the dangling and prone bags and bundles of sticks.

The crowd is huddled together far in excess of the capacity of the buildings they occupy and with no sign of organization. Each case is to be handled on its own merits, before transfers are made. Some will be discharged from the service, but the greater number will be given domestic service.

PHILADELPHIA, June 29.—The last issue of the Philadelphia Evening Telegraph, one of the oldest afternoon newspapers in the country, will appear today. The paper has been purchased by Cyrus H. K. Curtis, owner of the Public Ledger and other publications. He will discontinue publication of the paper.

G. U. MAN DRIVES AMBULANCE DURING BATTLE AT NIGHT

The experiences of an American ambulance driver under fire are very vividly related by Karl W. Kindelberger, a graduate of Georgetown University, in a letter to his friend, Hugh J. Fegan, secretary of the law school of that institution.

In part Mr. Kindelberger says: "We arrived on the most important sector of the Germans' first push, and I had the honor of being at the wheel of one of the four cars that went right up to the front posts the night the French stopped the Germans."

Saw Fighting in Open. "Shells were flying everywhere and the roar of the French guns was terrible. I slept none that night and was always on the alert, because no one knew when we would have to go back."

"The fighting was all in the open and it was a great sight to see an actual battle and be even a small part of it."

"I saw four towns burning at once and six German aviators brought down in the course of a few hours. On April 17 and 18 the Germans threw gas at us and we carried many victims for some forty or fifty hours. I and eight others were gassed by working in it. I have just returned to my section and so have the others, except one, who was badly burned."

Drove Through Demolished House. "The night of the gas we had six cars going 'en panne' and it was so dark that one of the boys drove right through a demolished house before he knew he was off the road. For this work our whole section was cited and decorated before the general of the division on Sunday, May 12, in the public square of this little town."

"This sector is now comparatively quiet, but sometimes the whole 'works' opens up and things are very lively for a few days. The German aviators come over every night and drop little presents on us."

After returning to the front line Mr. Kindelberger says he was further rewarded for his work by meeting too old college friends, W. B. McCarthy and John E. Waters, the former having come eighty miles to see him.

SOUTHERNERS ENTERTAIN. Officers and enlisted men at Walter Reed Hospital who are convalescing from wounds received "over there" know today what good entertainers members of the Southern Society of Washington are. They were the honored guests of the society at an informal reception at the Washington Hotel last night. Prior to the reception a business session was held at which Dr. Clarence J. Owens was elected president of the society to succeed C. C. Calhoun.

A., will be married today at 4 o'clock. Although a church wedding, solemnized in picturesque St. John's, Lafayette Square, the ceremony will be attended only by relatives and close friends of the bride and bridegroom. Afterward this little group of guests will be entertained at an informal reception and buffet supper at the home of Mrs. Blodgett, in Sixteenth street.

The Rev. Edward S. Dunlap, of St. John's, will officiate, and the pretty bride, who will be given in marriage by her father, will be attended by her schoolgirl sister, Miss Myrtle Porcher, and Miss Mona Blodgett as bridesmaids, and by Miss Helen Blodgett as maid of honor.

The church is simply but effectively decorated with palms, ferns, and pink and blue hydrangeas, striking the color note which is carried out in the gowns of the bride's attendants. Easter lilies will be used on the altar. The maid of honor will wear a lovely gown of rose pink changeable satin. The skirt is scalloped at the hem and embroidered in wild roses and forget-me-nots. The bodice is made in cross-over fashion, tying on each hip, where each end is passed through a wreath of roses and forget-me-nots. She will carry an armful of blue hydrangeas and delphinium tied with two-toned blue ribbon.

The bridesmaids' frocks are made on similar lines, but are built of peach-pink satin, and they will carry pink and blue hydrangeas tied with peach-pink and hydrangea blue ribbon. All three attendants will wear picture hats of tulle, with soft crushed crepons of satin to match their gowns.

In Soft Ivory Satin. The bride's costume is of soft ivory satin trimmed with point applique lace arranged in cascade effect on the skirt. On the bodice the same lovely lace is used to simulate an eon jacket, and the gown has flowing sleeves of tulle edged with point applique. The long court train of the satin is turned back at the corners and caught with clusters of orange blossoms. She will wear a tulle veil held with a circle of orange blossoms, and will carry a bouquet of white orchids, bride roses and stephanotis.

Mrs. Porcher, the bride's mother, will wear a lovely gown of orchid mauve and her wide brimmed georgette hat is trimmed with "cartridge banding" of velvet in a deeper tone. Mrs. Charles G. Matthews, sister of Mrs. Blodgett and Mrs. Porcher, will be groomed in white georgette crepe embroidered in milk beads, and will wear a becoming white hat.
